Established in 2006, Asian and Pacific Training Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development (APCICT) assists countries in the Asia and Pacific region to build human and institutional capacities to use information and communication technologies for socio-economic development. Over the years, the Centre has expanded the beneficiaries of its programmes, reaching not only government leaders and policymakers (Academy of ICT Essentials for Government Leaders launched in 2008), but also students and youth (Primer Series on ICTD for Youth, 2012) and women entrepreneurs (Women ICT Frontier Initiative – WIFI, 2016).

As part of the multi-channel delivery mechanism that APCICT employs in the implementation of its flagship programmes, the APCICT Virtual Academy, an online distance learning platform, was launched in June 2009. Recognizing the linguistic diversity in the Asia-Pacific region, the Centre is committed to offering its online courses in other languages. In line with this effort, the Centre continues to work with national partners to develop AVA courses in other languages. The Russian course on Realizing Data Driven Governance is the latest addition to the APCICT Virtual Academy. This module was designed to help government officials in developing countries understand data-driven governance and enhance the use of data for evidence based decision-making policy.

The demonstration session of this e-learning course will be conducted on 5 August 2020 with the following objectives:

- demonstrate the self-paced e-learning course on Realizing Data Governance that features short exercises, clickable content and multimedia materials;
- solicitate feedback and suggestions on the demo;
- identify e-learning training needs and topics among CIS countries;
- discuss ways to improve APCICT e-learning courses and learning experiences
